Ways to Keep Your Kids Learning in the Summer

For children who have been struggling in school, summer can be their opportunity to catch up on key skills and feel more confident when they head back to class. For students who do well, it’s an opportunity to reinforce enthusiasm for learning.

“Learning loss begins within 24 to 48 hours, unless the new information is reinforced or applied immediately,” says Richard E. Bavaria, Ph.D., vice president of education for Sylvan Learning Center. “After a month without reinforcement, approximately 80 percent of what a student has recently learned can be lost. You cannot start too early or too late to help your child prepare for going back to school.”

Parents play a key role in reinforcing learning on an ongoing basis. Here are some tips for integrating continuous learning into fun, family activities all summer long:

Read with your student. You can’t start too early, and you can’t read too much. Read together with your children and ask questions about the plot and characters.

Use the Web to create a reading list. There are an abundance of sites that provide summer reading lists for children. At www.bookadventure.com, children create personalized book lists from more than 7,000 recommended titles, take quizzes on the books they’ve read at school or home and earn prizes. The program is designed to motivate students to read more often, for longer periods of time and with greater understanding.

Visit the library. Libraries can recommend books appropriate for your child’s reading level and interests, and many libraries offer free family programs.

Participate in summer learning programs. There are a variety of programs available for children that reinforce learning. For example, Sylvan Learning Center provides math, writing and reading camps for students ranging from pre-kindergarten to eighth grade.

Find pen pals or keep a journal. Encourage your student to write letters to family and friends as a way of practicing writing. Regular entries in a journal will also keep writing skills alive.

Visit the library. Libraries can recommend books appropriate for your child’s reading level and interests, and many libraries offer free family programs.

WHAT DO YOU AND YOUR CHILD WANT?

by National Camp Association, Inc.

Regardless of the age of your child, it is important that the ultimate selection of a camp accommodate all or some of the needs, interests, goals, and expectations of both parent and child. The parent must make an effort to understand what the child wants and why. A good way to begin is to sit down as a family and respond to the following questions:

1. What do you and your child want to gain from the camp experience? Learn new skills, develop more self-confidence, improving proficiency in certain areas, become more independent?

2. What are other expectations of the camp experience?

3. What are the special interests that your child wants to explore?

4. Are there any physical, intellectual, or social limitations that should be considered?

5. What kind of emphasis will your child profit from the most? For example: Is a lot of structure desirable, is social interaction with members of the opposite sex important, or does your child need a place where he or she is encouraged to develop at their own pace?

6. You may have other concerns that you’ll want to keep in mind as you go through your selection process. If so, write them down below.

With the above information in mind, it is appropriate to look at some of the specific characteristics that should be considered in determining what you and your child want.

PROGRAMS & ACTIVITIES

As you might imagine, camps have all kinds of program offerings. Some camps may emphasize one activity while others will offer a wide array of programs. Camps in which a camper would devote a majority of his or her time to one activity are often referred to as Specialty Camps. In these camps, staff and facilities are geared to provide an intensive experience in a single area such as tennis, horseback riding, gymnastics, sailing or wilderness.

Naturally, these camps have other facilities and activities that provide campers with additional experiences. A more traditional camp program tends to be broader in terms of what it offers.

Most general camps will provide programs in some team sports such as baseball and soccer, individual sports like tennis, and waterfront activities such as swimming and sailing, as well as some outdoor life options in hiking and canoeing. Many of these camps also provide campers with the opportunity to get extra instruction in any of the areas that are offered. In making a decision about camp, it is vital that your child look into the total camp program and that you examine the quality of the staff and facilities available to support that program.

QUESTIONS:

1. Will the program encourage the child to try new things or things he or she is not skilled in?

2. What is the philosophy regarding competition and the level of competitiveness?

3. Which activities are required?

4. Is instruction given in each activity?

5. How structured is the program?

6. Are there electives (choices the child can make)?

7. Is your child willing to make a commitment to spending a major portion of the day in one activity or sport?

Once you have reached the point where you have begun to compare camp programs, you may want to return to some of these questions. For now, it is appropriate to try to pin down some of the program preferences you and your child have. A list of the common camp activities follows:

• Team Sports: Baseball, Basketball, Field Hockey, Football, Lacrosse, Soccer, Softball, Volleyball, Roller Hockey, Ice Hockey.

• Individual Sports: Archery, Fencing, Fishing, Golf, Gymnastics, Martial Arts, Wrestling, Track & Field, Biking, Minibikes, Go-karts, Weight Training, Riding, Riffery, Tennis, Figure Skating, Aerobics.
